Upon my Window Knocks

Upon my window knocks,
Not thrown stones nor floated rocks,
Nor stray dogs nor hungered cocks,
Twas the rasped cane,

Upon my window knocks,
Just as midnight strikes my clock,
Ravens flown away in frightened flocks,
Yet the knocking never stops,

There upon my windowed pane,
Striking time and time again,
Every night since then he came,
Knocking with his ancient cane,

I turn my head to try sleep,
Turn deaf to this devil's beat,
No comfort in my shrouded heap,
Tonight, I rise to my feet,

Peering through the window,
I see sights of wind and snow,
Of wrought trees and nests of crow,
But where is he, where did he go.

A Train without Tracks

A train without tracks,
Winds through the its path wherever,
Ignoring the pursuit of facts,
Focused on the questions,

The whistle blows,
Irregular without any flow,
Only one passenger stows,
To a destination no one knows,

Hills, valleys and rivers,
The train knows no bounds,
Twills, badly through shivers,
Treasures will be found,

Unrelenting,
The brakes never squeal,
Wind rain and snow,
The train does not feel,

The train knows nothing.

Swamp Cage

The sky illuminates,
Gasses rise and burn,
Days gone from whence I yearn,
No more I ruminate,

Iron, wrought and true,
Encloses me, above this stew,
Frogs and crickets hop,
They hop and hop and never stop,

The swamp is ever changing,
Despite my never aging,
I watch it like a motion picture,
As I, it crowned fixture,

Yet I am no king,
I once thought I a prisoner,
Now I think I'm listener,
Eternally observing.

Drive-thru

Clug,
Clug,
Clug,
The window slides on its track,
Front to back,
Front to back,
Clug,
The dim lights flicker,
Trying to escape,
The darkness clouds,
Their yellow fate,
Clug,
Red eyes,
Ahead of me in line,
Bear into mine,
Clug,
Blinded from behind.

Chunk

Lead pierced his chest,
Like blood flowed white,
Across his scorched skin,
There bore the mark,
Chunk,
